Like a great lazy serpent Highway 49 turns and twists through the Highways of the West. For 120 miles, from the Coast Range to the Coast Range and Sierra City to the north was once — and in many ways is — one of the most romantic sections of the West.

This is the route of the ruins of long forgotten buildings, the diggings where mining in one more than two and one-third centuries ago, the assayers busy supporting the houses, launch some fortune.

It drew thousands of the towns with improbable names like Bar, Rawhide, Rescue and L. Some like Grass Valley and new growth, others like Caldecott, decades of neglect.
