The White House approved the use of military aircraft for multi-national trips by Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price to Africa and Europe this spring, and to Asia in the summer, at a cost of more than $500,000 to taxpayers.

The overseas trips bring the total cost to taxpayers of Price's travels to more than $1 million since May, according to a POLITICO review.

Price pledged on Thursday to reimburse the government for the cost of his own seat on his domestic trips using private aircraft - reportedly around $52,000 -- but that would not include the cost of the military flights.

Price's wife, Betty, accompanied him on the military flights, while other members of the secretary's delegation flew commercially to Europe.

President Donald Trump on Monday called and endorsed Alabama candidate Roy Moore, the Republican Senate hopeful who is facing accusations of sexual misconduct, the White House said.

"The President had a positive call with Judge Roy Moore during which they discussed the state of the Alabama Senate race and the President endorsed Judge Moore's campaign," principal deputy press secretary Raj Shah said in a statement.

Moore has been accused by multiple women of seeking inappropriate relationships with them decades ago when they were teenagers and he was in his 30s. One woman said he assaulted her when she was 14 years old. Moore has denied engaging in any misconduct.
