

When the School
Room Is Empty

The Dutch Boy

SUMMER'S approach means freedom to these youngsters. Merrily they'll soon pour out to revel in vacation sports—and the school room will be empty.

No interior could need paint more than a school room after a session's hard usage by a band of husky young ones. When it is free of its lively occupants is the time to paint it.

Vacation time is your opportunity. Get after the school trustees to have each room repainted before pupils come flocking back.

Inform them that flat paint made of Dutch Boy white-lead and flattening oil covers walls and ceilings with a smooth hard coating which permits easy washing of soiled spots. That it spreads light evenly with no glare to affect pupils' eyes. That it tints to any color. And that it spreads farther and lasts longer than most paints and so costs less in the end.

Vacation time is your opportunity. Make it pay.
