Today on Climate Beat . . .

. . . we took a trip to Asia, reporting that Energy Secretary Rick Perry's visit to Japan and China for a series of international meetings on clean energy means that he is likely to receive an earful from foreign leaders about President Donald Trump's recent decision to leave the Paris Agreement.

Speaking of Paris, our daily news roundup gathered the best coverage – including our own – of Trump's decision on the landmark global deal. We also highlighted some of this week's must-read stories, which naturally had a heavy dose of Paris news.

Back in China, California Gov. Jerry Brown (D) is visiting the world's top greenhouse gas emitter next week to begin preliminary talks to connect the state's cap-and-trade program with China's GHG trading programs.

And over at EPA, a retired scientist with more than a quarter-century of service at the agency has sent Administrator Scott Pruitt a scathing letter outlining his continuing concerns about its direction under his leadership, including a lack of effort to address climate change.
