laborers and others who perform hard manual labor the retirement age is 65, while for railway mail clerks and others whose occupations are rigorous and classed as hazardous, the retirement age is 62 years. The retirement ages would not be changed under the Lord proposals.

AMORTIZATION NOT TOUCHED

"This amendment," the proposal submitted to Senator Stanfield said, "would make unnecessary any prescription in the law defining how the fund is to be amortized and would leave the matter of amortization for recommendation by the President to Congress in the budget."

Two weeks ago, reporting on the Stanfield bill, Secretary of the Interior Work recommended a maximum annual annuity of $960. The annuity recommended in the Lord proposal is $200 less than the maximum recommended in both the Stanfield and Lehlbach measures.

President Coolidge is said to have approved generally the principles embodies in both measures, but thought their total annual cost to the government was too high. He has also registered opposition to the proposal to retire employes under 70 years of age. He has told groups and individuals who have conferred with him on retirement legislation that as a result of the tax reductions the government is close to a deficit and some thought must be given to every piece of legislation which would authorize expenditure of public money, especially if the authorization is to be for an annual expenditure for an indefinite future period.

STANFIELD SEES PRESIDENT

Senator Stanfield was with President Coolidge for a quarter of an hour, going over with him all angles on retirement legislation. The senator gave no indication when he left the executive offices whether he believes safe form of retirement legislation will be enacted at the present session. He said he was not opposed to the Lord proposal before he believes some form of retirement legislation will be enacted at the present session with the purpose of liberalization without a greater expenditure of public money.

Officials of the budget bureau felt today that the Lord proposal would offer a common meeting ground for those who favor the higher annuities and those who are against increasing the annual payments above $900.

science and experience. Since milk has also proved to be the best preventative and corrective of nutritional ills in children and adults as well, it is of the utmost importance that the milk used for that purpose be of the highest quality obtainable. Through the approved local milk inspection service, the consumer secures assurance of the safety and wholesomeness of the milk delivered at his doorstep at all times.

The contest was conducted by M. E. McDonald, supervising milk specialist for the state department of agriculture, Sacramento, and Mr. W. Anderson of the Vallejo Health department. The results follow:

Economy In Buying Lumber

Our experience in the building material business has taught us that certain kinds of material are better suited for certain purposes than others.

Sometimes the cheaper grades will do the work fully as well as the more expensive ones; in other places it is economy to use the better grades because they last longer or look better.

Thus our knowledge of materials and construction will SAVE YOU MONEY AND MISTAKES. If you are interested in building drop around to see us.
