published, which kept the wooden buildings out of the business district. All of the work of building a town was under way.

When Meyers first came to Burlingame in 1896 the police and fire departments were in a primitive state. George Jones was the city marshal, chief of police, prosecuting attorney, tax collector, poundmaster and all the rest of the police department combined. He was the busiest man in town. The fire department was an old beam wagon, which the citizens pulled along the streets. Ringing the fire bell called out the whole population.

Albert Meyers was born in San Francisco in 1877 and went to school there in the public schools and at Mission college. He then entered the building material business with the uncle, Adolph Meyers, in San Francisco and worked with him off and on for thirteen years, part of this time being associated with his father in the hay and grain business.

Later he became associated with the Pacific Hardware and Steel Company, remaining with them four years until the San Francisco fire of 1906. With them trying around as to what the improvements and changes are. Meanwhile, the above reason are in business darkness, to be reopened for active business tomorrow afternoon.

"Many orders for the new model have been booked in advance, showing public confidence in Studebaker workmanship," says J. B. Cockcroft, manager, Motor Sales Company.

the company temporarily out of business following this, he came to Burlingame and entered the real estate business.

He opened his first office at the corner of Burlingame avenue and San Mateo Drive at a time when the creek which is now confined to a suburban passage, ran unconfined down Middlefield Road, along a portion of Burlingame avenue, and thence across the square to the Southern Pacific right of way.

Meyers has been continuously an active worker in the affairs of Burlingame. He was the municipal judge there for ten years, only leaving that office during the present year. He is a member of the Masonic lodge, Burlingame Chamber of Commerce and the San Mateo-Burlingame Real Estate Board.
