TEETH

The comfort of a pure breath and wholesome saliva, the agreeable effect produced on others by the exhibition of a clean and healthy mouth, the advantages of the teeth in vocalization, the favorable impression made upon the general health by the ability to thoroughly masticate the food, exemption from the suffering incident to diseased organs and the possibility of the preservation and usefulness of the teeth till advanced life, are reasons sufficient, it would be thought, to induce every one to pay that attention to the mouth which would secure such results. The expense incurred is not as great as is considered necessary for gloves or ties. Consultation free. Instruments sterilized.
