Several months ago I was asked by representatives of Doble Engineering Company, a major utility service company, to participate in their annual client conference.

I was asked to discuss my suggestions for the proper disposal of scrap transformer fluids and contaminated waste. Since the audience will consist of about 400-500 representatives of utility companies, I believed this is an opportunity to reach a group with which we may not have communicated properly, therefore I accepted the invitation.

Attached is a draft of my proposed talk. Ed John has offered his suggestions which are included in this version. May I have your comments. I would like to mail the final draft to Doble early next week.
