Regarding the request for detailed information on PCB from the San Francisco Regional Water Quality Board, I have only one observation.

I know our detailed literature on Aroclors lists darn near every potential market where PCB might be used. I understand some of these references will be deleted from future literature.

I have been told in discussions with you and other people that Aroclors are not used, "to our knowledge", in house paints, vinyl plastics, automobile tires, floor tile or pesticides. Of course, these are the potential "polluters" which come to the public's mind.

If I am wrong, or if we give contradictory information to the board, please let me know immediately.
