LOU REED, of Los Angeles, shoots U. S. Climax Trap Loads. You can't blame him. Not when you consider that he and U. S. Climax went through the year 1929 with a score of 1961x2000. Not when you consider that only on two occasions did shooter and shot-shell score less than 98x100.

Lou Reed shot his way, with U. S. Climax, to the very top of the 2000-3000 class in 1929. His score is a tribute to the consistent performance of the shooter and of the trap load that he prefers.

Climax and Defiance Trap Loads—both of them under the U. S. symbol of ammunition quality—are popular at traps everywhere. They are part of the big U. S. family of shot-shells and cartridges that provides ammunition for every shooting purpose, for every shooter's purse.
