Izzy—

I'm so embarrassed by this guy...turned out to be way more persistent than I thought he would be. Unless you guys want to handle it differently, I'm going to tell him to quit the unsolicited inbounds.

Hope all is well.

Hi Nate!

I hope you are having a great day. I'm confirming we received this and I have sent it over to one of the Secretary's Senior Advisors for review.

Thank you,

Izzy

Izzy,

Would you please forward this email to Secretary Wright? Also, would you please send me a quick reply letting me know you are receiving these emails?

Thank you,

Dear Secretary Wright,

I notice that you made some news by bringing up "climate change."

Before you enter a fight, know you will win.

When the arguments start, and they will more and more, you need the right, instinctive response. Plenty of public figures don't know how to argue. Often, their attempts are ineffective. Or, they end up sounding foolish. Why risk that when systems can help you shine instead?

I wrestled in high school. I liked it and was willing to spend my after-school hours in the "dungeon" in our old country school. A lot of wrestling was learning how to respond to the opponent's attacks. For example, if someone got behind me to throw me, I knew just what to do. I would hook their leg with my foot and then use both hands to try to pull one of their fingers back – only one. It hurts. I'm 55, and that is still my instinct.

When it comes to arguing with others, I want you to be able to say, "If we start sparring over this idea, I am going to win." I can prepare you to counter every attack. We will list and analyze every argument. Then, you can respond instinctively to win.

I wish you the best,

Nate Davis
