Good morning,

Hope this email finds you well! Thank you for reaching out and inviting the Administrator to attend the McKinsey Center for Government's reception. Unfortunately the Administrator will be traveling that day and is unable to participate. I'm sorry that we are unable to make this work! Please do not hesitate to reach out to me in the future regarding event invitations!

Thank you!

Mr Scott Pruitt:

I want to personally follow up and ensure you saw our invitation below for McKinsey Center for Government's reception taking place next Friday, April 21 in Washington, DC (coinciding with the IMF/World Bank meetings). I also have some exciting updates regarding our program. We're pleased to announce that The Honorable William Morneau, Finance Minister of Canada will join us as a keynote speaker. In addition we have assembled an all-star panel discussion including Elaine Kamarck, Founding Director of the Center for Effective Public Management, Brookings Institution; and Bjarne Corydon, former Finance Minister of Denmark.

I'll also be giving a brief presentation on the report we're publishing next week: "Government Productivity: Unlocking the $3.5 trillion opportunity." We look forward to hosting a dynamic discussion on how governments can take bold actions to deliver better outcomes to citizens, for every dollar, euro or peso spent—and to the opportunity to meet and mingle with our peers.

I hope to see you there. You can RSVP at mcg@mckinsey.com.

Regards,

Richard

Mr Scott Pruitt:

On behalf of McKinsey & Company and the McKinsey Center for Government we are pleased to invite you to join us for a reception in honor of the launch of a new global report on Government Productivity, which will take place during the IMF-World Bank Spring Meetings in Washington, DC on April 21.

This conversation comes at a critical time for government leaders: perhaps unprecedented social, political, and economic challenges evolve amidst rapid technological advances and opportunities for improvement. Public sector leaders are called upon to manage change and build capacity within their organizations in order to empower transformative governance and meet citizens' rising expectations.

"Strengthening government productivity, a global perspective," will feature presentations and a high level discussion on the productivity opportunity and how governments can take bold actions to deliver better outcomes to citizens, for every dollar, euro or peso spent.

This is an executive-level gathering is by invitation only, and we believe that your voice will be an important one in this conversation. If you are unable to attend or would like to nominate a deputy or senior aide please do let us know.

Keynote & cocktails:

Friday, April 21 from 5:00pm until 7:00pm

The Ritz Carlton

1150 22nd St NW, Washington, DC 20037

RSVP: mcg@mckinsey.com

We hope to see you in Washington.

Sincerely,

Richard Dobbs, Global Director, McKinsey Center for Government

Bjarne Corydon, Global Director, McKinsey Center for Government; former finance minister, Denmark
