manufacture, distribution, supply, and installation of asbestos-containing products and whether their products were defective and unreasonably dangerous.

You will remember from His Honor's instructions, there is a constant theme that runs through those instructions, you always hear the word reasonable.

It is there because the law is very reasonable as it relates to manufacturers and people that might be exposed to those manufacturer's products, and it is reasonable because it puts the risk of doing certain things on the people that are going to put the products into the market, the manufacturers make the products, they have the right to put the products into the stream of commerce, but they have to act reasonably.

They have to take certain precautions. They have to perform certain tests, and the reason for that is because as Ms. Hines told you, the value of human life is very dear in our society, and we want to take every precaution and the manufacturer or the supplier
