you, he pulled the stuff out, would put it in like little pails and they would mix it with water and then they would put it all around them joints.

Q Is it fair to say, correct me if I am wrong, but you really didn't pay too much attention to it because that really wasn't your trade, your trade was a plasterer; is that right?

A That is right.

Q Really didn't --

A I worked around them dozens and dozens of times, every job for 40 years and I seen them mud it and I seen them cut it, and I have seen them put it up and I seen them play ball with the stuff, throw it through the air, kick the dust up, throw the dust around and everything else on these jobs.

And, mister, if you get on these construction jobs and work like we did, you could see them doing the same thing.

Q I grew up as a contractor and my dad is, and I know what you are talking about.

A I am glad you did. I want to make clear
