Q And as of November 1972 --

A But now --

Q -- what was the law?

A I don't know.

MR. TOWLE: Objection?

A As I say, it must have been just been proposed at that time or it may have been adopted, whatever OSHA said. OSHA had regulations there and whatever OSHA said and they said you've got to label this something like that, you have to label it. Now the problem is, I think the law read something about to the effect that where subsequent machining operations will be involved, you've got to do this. And somebody said what are the subsequent machining operations or something, I -- I can't tell you. I would have to read the OSHA regulations at that time.

Q Isn't it true that at this time OSHA had initially wanted the words "danger" and "cancer" to be included in the label and industry including the FMSI did not want those two boards in the label?

MR. FRIESTEDT: Objection to form.

A That is my understanding.

Q Why didn't industry wanted those two words in the label?
