its loss control advisory committee, sound safety engineering, industrial hygiene, fire protection engineering, and other loss prevention principles are promoted Major activities include the dissemination of information on safety subjects, conduct of specialized training courses for member company personnel, sponsorship of research, cooperation in the development of safety standards, development of visual aids, and the publication of technical and promotional safety literature A catalog of safety materials is available without charge

Notable among the publications issued by the department are

Safe Openings for Some Point-of-Operation Guards
Wood Working Circular Saws, Protection for Variety and Universal Types
Spreaders for Variety and Universal Saws
Nip Hazards on Paper Machines
Handbook of Organic Industrial Solvents
Judging the Fire Risk
Tested Activities for Fire Prevention Committees
Exit Drills in the Home
Handbook of Hazardous Material
Commercial Driver's Code
Safety Memos for Fleet Supervisors

Other Alliance departments also regularly issue a variety of bulletins, reports, research reports and similar materials that often may relate to and support work safety and accident prevention The communications department, for example, publishes the general interest magazine, Journal of American Insurance, as well as leaflets, brochures, and other informational and educational materials Inquiry is invited

The Alliance cooperates extensively with trade associations, professional societies, and other organizations with similar interests, such as the National Safety Council, the National Fire Protection Association, the American National Standards Institute, Inc , the American Society of Safety Engineers, and the American Industrial Hygiene Association

American Insurance Association
Engineering and Safety Service
85 John Street, New York, N Y 10038

The American Insurance Association, organized January 1, 1965, is an advisory organization serving a large number of companies in the property-liability insurance field It is a multi-line organization designed to help its members' and subscribers' companies meet many of the diverse problems confronting the insurance business today Embodied in the Association are the traditions, experience, and accomplishments of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, the Association of Casualty and Surety Companies, and the former American Insurance Association

The Association's Engineering and Safety Service develops and publishes recommended safety programs and procedures, codes and ordinances for buildings, and the control of fire hazards It prepares and issues bulletins to Association member companies and to public officials on matters of special interest in all manner of accident and fire prevention It studies special hazards in specific industries and recommends safety measures

The Association, through staff and subscriber representatives, has working representation on more than 175 committees of the National Safety Council, American National Standards Institute, and the National Fire Protection Association In addition, the Association has worked closely with other trade, industry and professional groups with similar interests

Typical of the publications issued are the following

Accident Prevention (partial listing).

Commercial and industrial
An Emergency First Aid Guide
Office Building Safety Instructions
Your Guide to Safety as a Hospital Employee
Women in the Factory
General Safety Instructions
Supervisor's Safety Guide Book

Commercial vehicles fleet
Commercial Vehicle Driver's Guide Book
How To Hire Better Drivers

Construction
Your Guide to Safety in Demolition Operations
Your Guide to Safety on Construction Projects