Re: Medical Surveillance for Asbestos Exposure

Recently there has been some confusion about the level of exposure to asbestos that justifies placing an employee on a medical surveillance program.

The current OSHA standard requires medical examinations for anyone with a measureable asbestos exposure. This means an exposure to any airborne asbestos. This is consistent with the medical examination criteria specified in upational Health Examination Guide.

It is my understanding e a new asbestos standard, and the medical examin onsideration for revision. However, we must adher the present standard until the new standard
