- Course Change: The US Air Force Now Wants to Keep the A-10, U-2, and F-15C | In a reversal, the service will not retire three Cold War-era planes still making an impact on the battlefield.
- The Future of the US Navy | In May, Chief of Naval Operations, Adm. John Richardson, offered his own thoughts in a nine-page white paper: 355 ships is the right size — but the 2040 target is about two decades too late. America’s competitors are building navies that outstrip our own, he writes, and so it’s time to challenge all assumptions and start turning out better, more flexible ships and aircraft for far less money and time. We’ll lead off this ebook with a look at his vision.
