The magician living on Treasure Island had told the Raggedy and the little fat captain that he made the treasures and buried them over the island so that people would come and look for them. And he told them that there are treasures buried all about the island and you can find them by searching almost in any direction.

The magician has also told the Raggedy and the little fat captain that it was long of that treasure and watching people search for them because it was just like a game of hide and seek.

"Now the fierce brigands will come over a treasure over Water Tower Hill!" Raggedy Ann said. "Cause the magician said there was a treasure buried there so let us go another way and see if we can find a treasure too!"

And as there was a very pretty little stream of water running through the woods the Raggedy and the little fat captain decided to follow its banks so that they could hear the laughing and tinkling of the water as it tumbled over the mossy stones.

And they had barely got started upon the little path at the side of the brook before they heard loud shouting and they knew it was the fierce brigands. They have found

"Exactly," said the fierce brigand leader, "and I shall give every single golden penny to the orphan children in the town, so that they can always buy every thing they want, and pretty clothes and shoes and go to the movies and everything! That is what I shall do with my part of the treasure!"

And all the fierce brigands one after another told what they intended doing with all of their golden pennies just as soon as they reached home.

"That is very, very nice!" Raggedy Ann said. "And after you reach home and have given all of the treasure away you come back here again and I bet a nickel that you will find another treasure. Cause, when anyone is so unselfish he is sure to meet with good fortune time and time again!"

And Raggedy Ann, looking into the bushes saw the twinkling eyes of the magician looking out at him and he was up and down as if to say to Raggedy Ann:

"You are quite right, and I shall see that they find another treasure!"
