Dear Doctor Tipton:

Thanks very much for your letter of September 16. I've been tardy in replying for the reason that a number of matters came to my desk during my vacation and have kept me busy since.

I think you are right about the desirability of a "face-to-face discussion" with Dr. Schroeder (and perhaps others) about some of the basic differences in our viewpoints. I believe, however, that it would be a better performance on my part to write to him directly, rather than to depend upon your intervention. I mean, by this, no disrespect for you or your suggestion. Rather, I think that professional courtesy, on my part, would be a better gesture. I shall make the attempt and see what comes of it. I do appreciate your interest.

Sincerely,

Robert A. Kehoe, M.D.
Professor Emeritus of Occupational Medicine
