get tickets to the jazz concert at Pier 6.

My parents would go to different concerts that would occur and come down at Howard University, and they would bring me food because I was only making $5,000 a year, a student trying to make it.

They would -- my father taught me about cars. My father was immaculate. My father always, you know, try to look good, keep your points of appearance.

His car was always clean and if it was dusty, he would wash it. He would keep it clean. He cared for his car as well as his house.

We did chores, different things around the house together, different home projects.

Q What type of chores or projects around the house do you recall?

A The worst one was the year of the Watergate hearings when I had to paint the house with him.

That was not a fun job, so I hated that, but we would do things like choose air conditioners, work on bathrooms and one of the largest things that my
