Cory,
Could we do this after February 12? Is that too late?

Thanks,
Scott

Good afternoon, Scott, and thanks for the e-introduction, Marc!
That great to hear! We would probably do a phone interview for this project. No strict list of questions, it's more of a semi-structured interview where we can chat more generally about what invasive species policies worked in the past, what has fumbled, how does it compare to the sea lamprey story, examples from your career, things like that. Please let me know if you would have time next week for a phone interview - likely 30-40 minutes, audio recorded, talking about invasive species policy. Monday (Feb. 5th) and Wed. (Feb. 7th) are currently wide open for me. Looking forward to chatting with you!

Best,

Cory

Hi Scott,

Hope you are doing well. I am about to spend a month in DC; perhaps Bob Lambe and you and I can meet up this February to get caught up on things.

I am writing to introduce you by email to Cory Brant, who is working on a project with me and others at the University of Michigan (I work at U of M as well as at the Great Lakes Fishery Commission). The project compares the response to sea lamprey to other invasive species.

Cory, who is a post-doc, is interviewing key individuals involved in invasive species policy, and I thought you would be an excellent person for him to talk to, given your extensive background in the topic. Really, I don't know of many others who know the subject like you do.

I'll let Cory follow up, but I'm hoping you have the time to talk with him.

And do let me know if you have time to catch up while Bob and I will be in DC this February.

All the best,

Marc

Thanks Scott. Is there a date in February that is particularly good for you? Perhaps we could meet you for lunch somewhere? Bob and I are there every week of February except next week. We're also there early March.

Thanks again,

Marc
