Dear Jerry:

Thanks for your letter of February 22. Let me correct just one item in it. My unwillingness to travel, at present, is due largely to the fact that I am bothered considerably by ocular cataracts which will be attended to in due course. I am not wholly free of certain other impairments, but these I could ignore, largely, if my vision was not so impaired as to make unaccompanied travel a very uncertain affair. I am not working, naturally, at a very high level of accomplishment; but I shall improve my performance as soon as my opthalmologist decides to take care of my ocular disability, for I think the cataracts are not complicated by any other difficulty. If I can manage to keep in touch with the general situation, I should be able to get back into fairly good functioning before long. I should be glad, therefore, if you would let me know of your doings or of relevant activities of others which come to your attention. If I can, with your help and that of certain other people, manage to keep up with what is going on, I shall not be entirely helpless.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

Robert A. Kehoe, M.D.
Professor Emeritus of Occupational Medicine
