lived in California. By 1980, California will boast a population of approximately 24 million. This means that by then one out of every 10 U.S. residents will be a Californian. Although the westward trek has diminished the past few years, approximately 8,000 newcomers established residence in California last year.

What continues to bring people to El Dorado? New industries, good educational facilities, newer traditions, endless supplies of sand, surf, sun, and sex. And, of course, the dream of the good, somehow different life.

CANCER TEST

British medical scientists have developed a new cancer detection test. It reveals that cancer may be growing in a patient 10 years before a physician can detect it.

Developed by Professor E. J. Field and a team of researchers at the Newcastle General Hospital, the test was recently described in the "British Medical Journal."

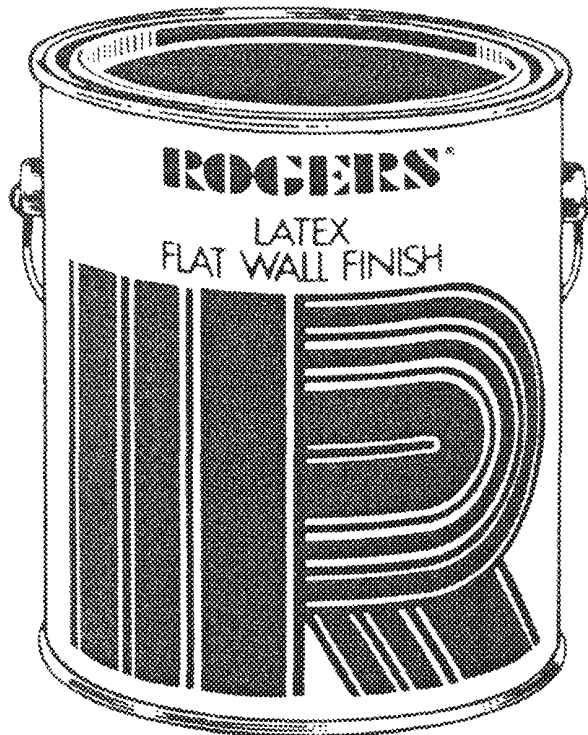

It is based on the discovery that the white blood cells of people with cancer develop a special reaction to a protein present in cancerous tumors. These affected cells can be detected in a lengthy, com-
