Dear Mr. Sandler:

I was unable to find time sooner to reply to your note of November 22nd, but I now do so in order to correct a misunderstanding which, it seems, was due to my failure to describe properly, the material which I wanted you to return to me.

The two items which you returned - a booklet with a green paper back, and a reprinted editorial from the Journal of the American Medical Association - were intended for your continued use, if you so desired. The somewhat thicker sheaf of printed material (unbound) was my only separate copy of a chapter which I had written for inclusion in a standard work on industrial hygiene. For this reason I wish to have this sheaf of material returned to me. I shall be glad to send back to you the booklets which you returned to me, if you want them, and later, I shall send other articles that may be useful to you and your associates.

Sincerely yours,
