cupational safety and health standards after writing in additional amendments which further diminish bill's resemblance to original Administration proposal. One change makes it mandatory, rather than optional, for Secretary of Labor to adopt "national consensus" standard when one exists.

MORE ON

Occupational Safety & Health. Administration and labor union pressures will undoubtedly be exerted on the House leadership to get the Rules Committee to grant a rule to H.R. 17748. House Education and Labor Committee Chairman Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) requested Rules consideration of the measure without even waiting for its formal reporting. The House version of the Occupational Safety and Health bill was ordered reported July 10 by Perkins' Committee. On July 11, the Rules Committee adopted a resolution stating that it was adjourning for this session, subject to recall only for consideration of "emergency legislation."

H.R. 17748, a revised version of the original Administration-sponsored measure, contains amendments designed to modify slightly the Labor Secretary's powers in the field of industrial safety. It falls short of providing a substantial curb on those powers, however. Representative William A. Steiger (R-Wis.) is working on an amendment that would provide such a curb. The Steiger proposal, which was rejected in Committee but would be debated again when and if the bill reaches the House floor, would transfer the administration of the Act from the Secretary of Labor to a health-safety board.

The Senate Labor Subcommittee plans to mark up its original version of the job safety bill (S. 2864) on July 16, 17, and 18. A statement submitted to that Subcommittee by the National Chamber questioned the basic assumptions of the bill and pointed out some of its inherent defects and dangers.

Opposition to the federalization of industrial safety and health standards is extremely necessary and must be continued. If your Congressman is a member of the House Rules Committee, or if one of your Senators is a
