Today on Climate Beat . . .

. . . we looked at President Donald Trump's announcement that he intends to leave the Paris climate agreement, gathering reaction from several sources including former President Barack Obama, who helped negotiate and shepherd the deal into force during his tenure.

Over on the main site, we had much more reaction from a range of other groups, as well as a story with Trump's remarks from his announcement. And we also looked at the president's offer to "renegotiate" the deal and possibly stay in.

And our news roundup offered a good preview to all of the day's action.

Outside of Paris, the White House released an ethics waiver for special assistant to the president Michael Catanzaro, a former energy lobbyist, that will allow him to advise Trump and others in the administration on issues on which he lobbied during his time in the private sector just before coming to the White House.
