Subject: POLITICO REPORTS: How Steve Bannon and Scott Pruitt boxed in Donald Trump on the climate deal.

The president's chief strategist and EPA administrator have sought to outsmart the administration's pro-Paris group of advisers, including Trump's daughter Ivanka, who were hoping the president could be swayed by a global swell of support for the deal from major corporations, U.S. allies, Al Gore and even the pope. But some of that pro-Paris sentiment wound up being surprisingly tepid, according to White House aides who had expected that European leaders would make a stronger case during Trump's trip abroad earlier this month.
