Dear Mr. Wilkening

You wrote to me in August of 1965 about an incorrect statement in the reference section of an article by Brodie, Cosmides and Rall, in SCIENCE. As I indicated in my response, I wrote to Dr. Brodie, and in due course (September after I had left Cincinnati for Santiago, Chile) I had an answer, copy of which I enclose.

You will note that the apology is made to me, which is a bit beside the point, but the correction of the error has not been made. I dare say that few persons who read the article examined the references carefully, and perhaps there is no need to underscore the issue by calling further attention to it. I am acknowledging the receipt of the letter, however, (now that I have returned home and can get my correspondence up to date) and raising the question of a note of correction from the author. He is certainly in a position to appreciate the consequence that might result from such a statement.

Thanks again, for bringing this to my attention.

Cordially yours,

Robert A. Kehoe, M.D.
