Today on Climate Beat . . .

. . . we put a finger in the wind, reporting on a survey from the group Climate Hawks Vote showing lawmakers' reactions to EPA's proposal to repeal the Clean Power Plan (CPP) are "substantially more muted" than responses to President Donald Trump's June announcement that he intends to leave the Paris climate agreement.

Speaking of the CPP repeal plan, our daily news roundup looked at the coverage of EPA's public hearing in West Virginia on that plan, including testimony from coal miners who are on opposite sides of the Obama administration's landmark climate policy.

An in climate risk news, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt is doubting the link between climate change and more extreme hurricanes, charging that a recent federal climate science report does not discuss a "cause and effect" relationship, though he says such storms might be "enhanced in some way" by climate change.
