

thoughtfully that if he went there, he would be forced to denounce Revelcomb's stand on the DP bill

This was not really King Stork's first pounce, either. As previously reported, it was Dewey who piled the ERP appropriations loose from the obstinate, economizing grip of Representative John Taber. What gave force to Dewey's persuasions on that occasion was the fact that Taber had been threatened with a troublesome primary in his native Auburn, N. Y., two years ago. Dewey had helped him then. But of course, if Dewey's well-oiled New York organization had begun to see matters in a different light, the primary in Auburn might have been still more difficult this year.

BEFORE NOMINATION

It is worth noting that the historic persuasion of Tamer occurred even before Dewey got the nomination. The rebuff to Revelcomb has taken place before the formal opening of the Presidential campaign. Incoming Presidents
