arisen," and called upon the people to observe the laws

UNANIMOUS OK

Then it began to pass the measures, beginning with unanimous approval of a bill to restrict public assembly The springing up of nono-Communist political groups was one reason Soviet tanks rolled into Czechoslovakia

The Czechoslovak news agency was promised the law was "temporary"

In a state of the nation address, Cernik traced the reasons for the invasion He implied the intervention was unjustified At no time did he say Czechoslovak leaders invited the invaders, nor did he mention "counter revolutionists" the Soviet press daily uses as the reason for the invasion

Cernik said freedom of assembly and the press was ordered last spring by the new reformist leaders because they believed "there could not be a freedom for a narrow group of people, but a freedom embracing the widest sections of people" He said the reformists intended to change Czechoslovakia into "a prosperous modern socialist society"
