Reality check: Paul Bailey, president of the American Coalition for Clean Coal Electricity, tamped down on expectations the Trump administration would be able to do away with the Obama administration's Clean Power Plan quickly. "That's going to get a whole lot more complicated before it gets simpler," Bailey said. "I think people probably assumed that would go away quickly and easily, and I think will go away, [but] I don't think it will go away quickly and easily." He later quipped: "Now everybody sues the hell out of everybody else over everything."
