TO: PCB CONFEREES

GREETINGS!

To those who were not present for the meeting yesterday, may I welcome you to Duluth and the National Water Quality Laboratory.

As you can see by the number of people attending this meeting, many are concerned about PCB's and their impact on the environment. My original letter was addressed to only a few people, as I envisioned meeting with a small group sitting around a conference table at the Laboratory. But word that we were holding such a discussion has spread rapidly and we have had many calls from individuals interested in attending the meeting. I am sure that many others would be here if they had known about it.

I certainly hope the number of persons in attendance does not keep individuals from expressing their frank opinions, and I especially hope that we will be able to conclude this meeting with a well-planned list of research needs that must be met in order to properly assess the impact of PCB's on the environment. I think it is important to bear in mind that decisions will have to be made before all of the information is in and, for this reason, we will not want to make the list of research needs so long that they cannot be accomplished in a relatively short period of time.

Perhaps long-range planning is needed, but at this time short-range research plans are important in order to meet the pressing demands on us to provide answers and opinions.

We hope to prepare a summary of this meeting and mail it to you in the not-too-distant future so that we will each have available the more important conclusions that are reached during this meeting.

For those who did not have an opportunity to tour the Laboratory yesterday, we cordially invite you to visit the Laboratory today and become familiar with some of the programs that are under way at this time.
