his artistic creations combining element of painting and sculpture. The method is the result of six years' research and testing of materials and effects.

Hung in conventional frames, the works are built up with wood, metal, clay and cement to provide a high-relief or three-dimensional effect.

Roukes gained regional prominence with his original technique when the San Francisco Museum of Art gave his work public attention last year. This summer the chromoglyphs were featured in the "Art About the House" display arranged in a contemporary home exhibited in Palo Alto.

During a recent electrical storm, a bolt of lightning started a fire in upstairs wiring in her home. Awakened by barking dogs, Mrs. Kessler and her husband put out the fire.

Hours later, a second bolt struck the couple's house, starting a second fire—this time in the outside wiring.

The second blaze also was put out quickly, as was Mrs. Kes-sler's faith in old sayings.
