Q Okay. Do you recall receiving this from Mr. Marsh of Raybestos?

A Not specifically, but I'm sure I did.

Q He indicates there, quote, There is no question that excessive amounts of asbestos dust exist in many brake service centers and it is incumbent upon the industry to take an aggressive approach in providing its customers with information on the safe handling of asbestos-containing products, closed quote.

What did you do to adopt or effect an aggressive approach in providing brake customers with information on the safe handling of asbestos-containing products.

MR. FRIESTEDT: Objection to form, lack of foundation?

A I can't remember. But if you go back into the Asbestos Study Committee meeting reports, that's where it's all going to be. And in there we went and published a booklet on the thing, which I mentioned before and I -- I don't -- I believe the booklet was 1978. This here letter is 1976. And we put the notice in all our catalogs and all that about recommended procedures and recommend procedures are basically obey law. Keep down and, you know, get these efficient filtering devices and whatnot to keep -- keep
