My dear Machle:

I hate to be critical of our Medical Staff but, apparently, you have missed a bet both in the possibility of alleviating the misery of thousands of people and also in providing new uses for Ethyl Gasoline.

I will appreciate it if you will answer the attached letter directly, sending me a copy of your reply.

Very truly yours,

Gentlemen:

A new use (to me and those associated with me) for Ethyl gasoline has been brought to my attention the past few days. It has been used as a relief for neuritis and other neurotic ailments. It is used as an external application.

Two thoughts have come to my mind since I have heard of this use, namely:

1. What is there about Ethyl gasoline that has the properties mentioned above?
2. Could your research people discover or have they discovered a method of changing the substance so that it can be handled safely and still continue to have the same properties?

I have contacted a few people here in Lorain who would be willing to give testimonials stating the confidence they have in Ethyl gasoline as a relief for neuritis.

Should you be interested in more information, I will gladly recontact the above mentioned people to help in the field of research.

Yours very truly,

Harold J. Young
