A Yes. Anyone going into the containment area, either myself or the industrial hygienist working with us, has a complete coat, suit that you wear that forms a barrier and then wears respiratory protection before going in.

Q And why would they wear a complete suit?

A Well, that is to prevent any fibers that might get on your clothing from being brought out into the general environment.

They put on a clean suit to go into the containment and then you take it off, this outer suit, in a small dressing area outside of the containment area.

Q And the activities that you performed on these Ford brakes that you identified, sanding, the grinding, the sweeping afterwards, the filing, who actually performed those manipulations?

A The industrial hygienist named Todd Dawson that I work with.

Q He was under your direction?

A That is correct.
