My apologies,

The deadline is coming too soon. Our story needs to be posted on the Grady Environmental News website by Tuesday next week. I'm sure you're not in the office this weekend, so any answers that I could get tomorrow or Monday would be great.

Here's a link to show you where the story gets posted.

Nicholas, where will your story appear and what's your deadline?

Hello,

Thank you for your quick reply, here's where I've been getting my information:

My research into the state environmental budget shows a steady decrease in funds for Georgia in particular. The table in the above link shows a decrease in Georgia's natural spending since 2011. These facts lead me into the questions:

1. In your professional opinion, why are we seeing this decrease in natural resource spending?
2. Why does Georgia have significantly less natural resource spending than all of its neighboring states like Florida and Alabama?

3. What is the general negative impact of budget cuts to natural resources?

If you or one of your colleagues could give insight into any of these questions, that would be greatly appreciated.

Thank you,
Nicholas Cordts
