The following are known to have been approved suppliers of asbestos: Canadian Johns-Manville, Lake Asbestos of Quebec, Nicolet Industries, Carey-Canadian, and Asbestos Corporation. It is unknown which source of supply was used in any particular product, which mines the raw asbestos was mined from and which locations the raw asbestos was shipped from. This defendant has located no documentation to ascertain from whom asbestos was specifically purchased prior to 1973. For the years 1973 through 1976, additional asbestos suppliers to this defendant may have been Atlas Asbestos, Union Carbide, and Pacific Asbestos; Atlas Asbestos and Pacific Asbestos shipped only to California.

The decision to commence a project to attempt to reformulate joint compound products without asbestos was made in 1972 for the purpose of manufacturing said products within OSHA guidelines. The decision was not made by a single individual and cannot even be traced to a specific group of individuals. Decisions relating to product retention and profitability are made with input from many groups within the Company.

Asbestos-free joint compounds began to be commercially produced at some plants in 1975.

Additionally, market demand for some products did not support the investment required for this defendant to reformulate the product without asbestos. This decision was not made by a single individual and cannot even definitely be traced to a specific group of individuals. Decisions relating to profitability and product retention are made with input from many groups within the Company. Some individuals who may have participated in the decision to discontinue some asbestos-containing products, as given in testimony by J. N. Walker in Lexington Co. School District Five vs. USG, on July 26, 1983, are: Earl Maynard, Dr. Zabor (then Vice President, Research).

Of the products identified in Exhibit A, the following were dropped from this defendant's product line due to low profitability, unrelated to the fact that these products contained some asbestos:
