Today on Climate Beat . . .

. . . we went to California, where Gov. Jerry Brown (D) and legislative leaders are engaged in a “steady stream” of meetings this week on legislation to extend the state's greenhouse gas cap-and-trade program to 2030, and are weighing several competing proposals on the issue.

In Congress, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee are poised to question the Trump administration's nominee to lead the Justice Department's environmental division, with a hearing that could focus on the administration's plans to roll back Obama-era climate rules and potentially undermine EPA's power to regulate GHGs.

And our daily news roundup looked at the White House's plans for “energy week,” in which they will tout commodity exports in an effort to achieve American energy “dominance.”
