

3. In 1990, the Warner Electric Division created a subsidiary in Mexico. The facility located in Chihuahua produced and continues to produce a cruise control component, for Ford Motor Company's Mexican subsidiary. This operation was not sold to Buyer.
4. Dana Industrial Co. Limited (Thailand) (aka Warner Electric Thailand) was incorporated in 1990 as a subsidiary of Defendant. It operated as a sales office.
5. In 1977, Defendant acquired Stieber Präzision GmbH (also known as Stieber Formsprag) and in 1994, Stieber Antriebselemente GmbH (Germany) was created as an indirect subsidiary of Defendant. Both produced overrunning clutches. At some time, they merged with Warner Electric GmbH.
6. In 1995, Warner Electric B.V. (Netherlands) was incorporated as a subsidiary of Defendant. It operated as a sales office.
7. In 1998, Warner Electric AB acquired Scanac AB (Sweden) assets. It manufactured a divisional product line for Warner Electric AB.
8. Tourco (Etablissements Collins et Tournadre) was incorporated in 1925 and acquired by Defendant in the late 1980s. It became a subsidiary of Defendant upon acquisition. This facility produced clutches. After this acquisition, GIE Warner & Gourco (France) formed Tourco as a quasi-subsidary under French law. It did not produce a product.
9. Taiyiu Warner Industrial Ltd. (Taiwan), a subsidiary of Defendant, operated as a sales office. The date of its acquisition or formation are unclear.
10. Shui Hing Manufacturing Company Limited (Hong Kong) was incorporated in 1966. Defendant acquired an 80% partial interest in 1989 and the remaining 20% in 1995. It manufactured industrial components.
11. Warner Electric S.A. (Belgium), a subsidiary of Defendant, operated as a sales office.
12. Wichita Clutch Company operation is separately discussed in another discovery document in response to the October 20, 2003 order.
13. Dana World Trade Singapore Private Limited was incorporated September 1, 1971 and changed its name to Dana Asia (Singapore) Pte. Ltd. on August 29, 1990. At some point, it began selling products produced by the Warner Electric Division and its affiliates and was sometimes known as Warner Electric Singapore.

Warner Electric also had international sales representation in Canada, Mexico, Malaysia and South Korea.