CAISO to Become Its Own Reliability Coordinator

By Adrienne Thompson & Christopher Zentz on January 8, 2018

POSTED IN RELIABILITY

On January 2, 2018, the California Independent System Operator Corp. ("CAISO") announced plans to become its own reliability coordinator by spring 2019. The plan will require CAISO to withdraw from Peak Reliability, the current reliability coordinator for the Western Interconnection. Although the full suite of reliability services to be offered remains unclear, CAISO stated that it will offer outage coordination, day-ahead planning, and real-time monitoring reliability services.

FERC Proposes to Improve Cybersecurity Incident Report Requirements in NOPR

By Meghan Mandel & Thomas DeVita on January 8, 2018

POSTED IN RELIABILITY, TRANSMISSION

On December 21, 2017, FERC issued a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking ("NOPR") proposing to direct the North American Electric Reliability Corporation ("NERC") to modify the cybersecurity incident reporting requirements under the Critical Infrastructure Protection ("CIP") Reliability Standards. According to FERC, the proposal is intended to "improve awareness of existing and future cyber security threats and potential vulnerabilities.”
