

...the Peninsula. When it is considered that within San Mateo county are fifty cities, towns and villages, each with its own independent government, the difficulty of solving common problems by any means other than by first combining all units into a single political subdivision is apparent. No other community in the world has undertaken such a task, and those contributing San Mateo county Newcomers will find it hard to find a stronger desire to establish a unit, create a single authority, bring to single water supply and plan for the future, than here. Our efforts are futile until we are in the strong arm of San Francisco to do any better.

It shows a stark, monumental area large enough to undertake these projects that cannot be undertaken by the cities and villages individually, that in the due purpose of the proposals that have been advanced that all we secure rapid transit, ports, water supply and proper planning. San Mateo county cannot develop in keeping with the program of the progressive element of its population.

(Tomorrow's article by Mr. Jackson will deal with the borough plan for amalgamation with San Francisco.)
