until the day he died, his wife said.

Gribbon, 75, died Tuesday after a three months' illness with cirrhosis of the liver and congestive heart failure.

But even during his final illness, the big, New York-born Irishman with the comic mug would don his Kops costume and play benefits, his wife said Wednesday.

On Tuesday, "Eddie just fell asleep in his big easy chair and never woke up," Mrs. Gribbon said.

Mrs. Gribbon, the former Marion Duffy, co-starred with Charlie Chaplin in many of the famed comic's two-reelers at Mack Sennett Studios.

"Eddie and I were married 46 years last Friday," she said "but he was so ill that the anniversary slipped our minds until we got some letters and wires of congratulations."

Gribbon came to Hollywood in him a Kevatone Kops and later starred him in other comic roles.

After service in World War I, he made a successful series of 36 war comedies with the late Slim Summerville. He also appeared in the Joe Palooka movies and in such films as "Till We Meet Again," "The Marines" and "The Callahan and the Marphose."

During World War II, he donned a real police uniform to act as a guard at a defense plant.

One of his outstanding characterizations was with Chaplin and Jack Oakie in "The Great Dictator."

In recent years, supported by wise investments in San Fernando Valley real estate, he did only benefits.

Rosary will be recited tomorrow.

THAT'S WHY

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U. S. Weather Bureau isn't playing games when it gives hurricane girls' names.

Use of short, easily remembered names helps avoid errors in transmission of vital information between widely scattered stations, ships at sea and hurricane hunting planes that fly into center of a storm.
