

gradual improvement in the world situation." He held out no hope for an early easing of East-West tensions.

"There has been, to this moment, no reason to believe that Soviet policy has changed its frequently announced hope and purpose—the destruction of freedom everywhere," he said. "We live in an age in peril."

READY FOR WORK

This country therefore has no choice but to arm and be ready for the worst."

Mr. Eisenhower said his recent "carefully calculated" cuts in defense spending were based not on any optimism about the motives of Russia's new leaders, but on the grim realization that the danger of war may hang over the world "for a long—an indefinite—period of time."

This country must tailor its defense program to that long haul, he said, lest it spend itself into bankruptcy and hand Russia a decisive victory in the global struggle between freedom and Red tyranny.

This was Mr. Eisenhower's first direct report to the people. He spoke from the renovated and ancient White House in the basement of the White House, surrounded by heavy curtains to kill the booming sound of the masonry walls of the room.

After his radio speech, he appeared on the television networks in a filmed, capsule version of the speech. He then returned to the room and summed up his program simply.

"What we are trying to do today is to find a program of security that costs the least, a end then through the most earnest kind of care to abolish duplication and luxury from expenditures."

THREE HEADACHES

He said in the radio speech that the Truman administration bequeathed him three major budget headaches:

1. If "over-estimated, tax collections for the next fiscal year by $1,200,000,000."

2. If failed to budget any funds specifically for the Korean war. "One item that could hardly be called obscure."

3. If left behind $81,000,000,000 in past spending authorizations which Mr. Eisenhower likened to "C.O.D." orders for armaments.

If there was another main theme in the President's speech, it was his belief that the defense of the United States cannot be pegged in any one peak year, or for that matter a specific number of Army divisions, ships or planes.

Argentina Lifts Restrictions on U. S. News Wires

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina. (U.P.)—A new government directive enabled American news agencies today to transmit world news again to newspaper and radio stations in Argentina.

The ministry of communications authorized the United Press and the Associated Press yesterday to turn on private radio-telegraph and the Argentine National News Service was told that its local wire distribution system should be restored.

(There was no immediate explanation for the surprise action by the Argentine government.)

The government order nullified a May 12 directive which had deprived American Press Associations of facilities for receiving news from abroad for their client newspapers in Argentina.
