

Inside EPA's

Risk Policy Report

September 20, 1996 • Volume 3, Number 9

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

Profiles

The National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences refocuses on risk p24

Guest Perspectives

Four Scientists from the International Life Sciences Institute's Risk Science Institute present key science questions for risk assessment p26

Past President of the American Industrial Health Council Ronald Lang sees positive developments arising from the past year's bitter regulatory reform debate p27

Commentary

Hugh Spitzer offers arguments for re-empowering risk managers and taking risk assessors out of the ivory tower p30

Breaking Stories

EPA seeks comment on ecorisk guidelines p12

Browner releases report on children's environmental health risks p15

USDA first-ever ecorisk assessments at OMB p18

Experts craft microbial risk assessment framework p19

EPA holds major bioaccumulation conference p21

Policy in the Making

People Notes p35

Tracking the Debate

A rundown of key meetings p33

Reviewing the Literature

Important new documents p36

Some Fear Delays Under EPA Cancer Guidelines

While most commentators welcome EPA's proposed guidelines as scientifically richer, some fear a slowdown in regulatory decisions

— page 3

EPA Dioxin Chapter Affirms Diverse Effects At Low Levels

The draft rewrite of EPA's chapter on dioxin dose-response modeling finds low levels may cause various effects

— page 10

Citizens Near Superfund Site Charge Environmental Racism

Residents near a contaminated site are outraged at EPA's cleanup plans and acceptable risk choices

— page 11

Edited exclusively for scientists interested in environmental policymaking and policymakers interested in science

DSW 133378