

like were soaked with wine were spread on the roofs of houses or wherever the fire was dangerous, with the result the wine soaked houses did not burn. Other parts of the city went up in flame and smoke, but Telegraph Hill was not; but there is a scarcity in that section and wine is scarce when it comes to the Italian section. But the grapes are not again, say the inhabitants, as easy to make wine—"Then we have our homes."

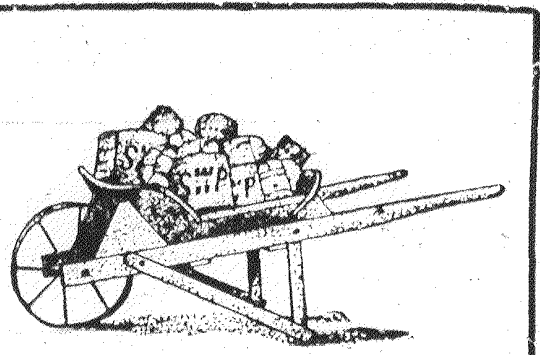

The main library of the San Francisco city hall were shelved 130,000 books, a total loss; two of the six libraries and two delivery vans also were destroyed, taking more. In addition the Mercantile, Sutro, Bohemian Club, B'nai B'rith, French, San Francisco law library, supreme court libraries, comprising upward of 700,000 books were destroyed. 40,000 volumes in the branch libraries were saved, which is a good start for the new library that will be a new building to the erection of which Andrew Carnegie has given $1,000,000; a block of land already had been purchased by the issue of bonds, the fire, and a million more dollars of money is available for the new fund. The priceless features of the library was the typewritten sentences of pioneers, bound in leather volumes. One library alone was intact. It is the Bancroft collection, stored at Twenty-third and Valencia streets, purchased months ago by the University of California. This famous aggregation of books is undamaged, and will be moved to Berkeley as soon as the conditions are favorable.
