Dr. Robert A. Kehoe,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

Dear Dr. Kehoe:

Mr. Lake Coulson, president of the Carlisle Baking Company, has asked me to write to you concerning one of his workers who has been working in gasoline. This man developed an itchiness of his skin without a rash on his body and soreness of the gums, on which I thought I could see a lead line. The man has been working with his bare hands in gasoline, his hands were chapped and cracked open. The question is, could he be developing lead poisoning from this contact with gasoline. His trousers, etc., are always pretty well saturated with gas too.

Yours truly,

E. S. Kronenberg M.D.
