federal government) will permit the product to be labeled as champagne. It is said that by that time, with the elimination of the costly handling and cellar aging, it will be possible to produce a high grade champagne for $1 a bottle or less.

Vintners forecast that as greater use is made of the grapes in California, an advertising campaign will likely be put on to stimulate the increased consumption of California champagne.

Leaders in the wine industry in the county hold that this industry is hardly to be looked on as a boom industry but that every possible effort should be made to stabilize it on a basis that will yield a fair profit to growers and vintners year after year. They are fearful of the effects of any promotional efforts by speculative groups.

by the speaker however when he related that the government since the passage of the Land-Lease bill has been seeking information on the prune situation as to the amount of fruit in the stabilizing loan pools and other information. He voiced the hope that perhaps something is brewing that may relieve the market perhaps a trifle, for system with Great Britain where normally prunes take a year were bought from this country.

Following the address a round table discussion was engaged in concerning the immediate control of prunes and the proper methods to pursue in preserving the fruit where it is stored away in a warehouse for a year or more. Prune drying is the first essential.
